She worked her way up, moving from office manager to marketing assistant to a director of marketing position. "I knew what I wanted and I went for it," Katrina said. Following her career to LA, it wasn't until she met her current husband that she decided what she really wanted to do was be a mom.

Ten years ago she left the corporate world to raise her family. With her son now in his last year of high school, she has found herself with free time on her hands, "I wanted something where I could meet new people and get out of the house," she said, "Uber has helped with both "Seattle is my home. I'm always amazed at how beautiful this place is. We're so lucky to live here," Katrina said with a smile.
